Windsor Essex Young Worker Council

Ever see something at the workplace that didn't seem quite right? Was nothing done about it because the workers were all young? Are you concerned about how young workers are treated? If you answered yes to any of these questions you may be interested in joining the Windsor-Essex Young Worker Council (WEYWC). AS a council member you will take an active leadership role in the community assisting and attending to the needs and concerns of young workers.

This is a great opportunity for students and young workers to come together to work to achieve change in their workplace. As a member you will; develop leadership skills, make connections in the community, and attain community service hours. In turn membership looks good on resume's, college and university applications. If you are interested talk to your teacher, or contact Windsor Occupational Health Information Service on how to get involved.
